The objective of the course is to:

- Understand what stage-gated process is, including the purpose of phases and gates
- Learn how to break up any project into phases and gate and create a fit for purpose roadmap
- Learn how to scale the process for different projects
- Describe the Front-End Loading phases in the capital project lifecycle, including the objectives, key focus, deliverables, and requirements for each decision gate
- Discuss the challenges and opportunities for each FEL phase

Who is the course for?

- Project managers and project engineers involved in project development and execution, especially of highly complex projects
- Executives and functional managers responsible for moving projects forward, projects sanction and resource management
- Project leads and team members involved in risk and quality management, contracts, scoping, options analysis and engaging with the key stakeholders.
- Framing facilitators and those involved in preparation, delivery and follow up from the opportunity framing workshops

Why In-House?

- Practical and immediate application to various project roles
- Cost effective by training large groups within your organization
- Fosters open communication, team building and collaboration
- Integrates your case studies for tailored experiences
- Addresses potential gaps in your organization's existing management practices for early project planning and governance structure

This course can take between 3h to 1 day

The course can be combined with the Introduction to Opportunity Framing course.
